‘Blocks needed’ refers to how many 3”/4” solid concrete blocks that you will need to have on site for the wooden assembly team to build your shed upon. The assembly team cannot supply these blocks (They’d just have a van full of blocks!), so it’s important that you have these ready on the day. Each block should cost approx €2-€4 from a builder’s merchant. You don’t need to place these blocks in any specific manner, just have them on site for the assembly team to use as needed.

We need to access your back garden to deliver your shed. If you do not have side access with an unrestricted height, you will need a Cutdown Service so that the shed can be delivered and assembled.

What is the cut down service? The shed is prepared and made into smaller pieces ahead of time, so that it can pass more easily through smaller spaces. There is no structural or visual differences between sheds that have been 'cut-down' and those that have not.

Cut down service cost: €55

TALLER STYLE SHED

The Taller Style shed is a bit of a mix of the Standard and the Cottage sheds. It's got the apex to the front like a Standard, but it has an 8ft apex, like a Cottage. They're great if you have awkwardly sized things to store, or if you need a bit more headroom in your shed. They're the most popular choice for workshops, home gyms and for placing pool tables in!

ADDITIONAL DETAILS

You will require a relatively level ground for your wooden shed to be built onto. You will also need to have the appropriate amount of 3” or 4” slid concrete blocks on site for the assembly team to build your shed upon. You can see how many are required beside each size on the products in this brochure. If you have any questions about this, please call 01 864 4247.

Lead-times on sheds can vary depending on season, but you will be advised of your lead time at order. During the off-season, sheds can be built in 1-3 weeks, and during the high season, it can take up to 12 weeks.

Rustic Sheds are very basic sheds. In exposed areas where heavy rain may blow against the shed, rain will soak through the timber causing the shed and it’s contents to get damp. We do not recommend that you place electronics or anything else that could be damaged by damp in a Rustic Shed.

During the sales process, it will be necessary to pass your details on to third party bodies to complete the manufacture of your shed. Sheds Direct Ireland are agent for a wooden shed manufacturer based in Ireland and as such, your address and shed requirement details will be passed onto them to fulfill.

If you have any questions about wood types or any extras, call us at 01 864 4247 for more info.

WOOD TYPES

Here is a breakdown of all the wood types available from Sheds Direct Ireland.

Rustic

Rustic wood is the most basic and thinnest wood that we offer. It is 10mm thick, rough overlapping sheeting. These sheds are not air-tight and they can (and likely will) become damp in wet weather. We would not recommend that you store anything that can be damaged by damp in Rustic Sheds. These sheds need to be treated every 12 months to keep them in good condition.

Deluxe

Deluxe Wood is over twice as thick as Rustic Wood. It is 22mm thick and the panels lock in together. It is a tongue-and-groove planed timber, meaning that the panels slot into each other. Deluxe wood is the most common choice for Wooden Sheds in Ireland. It will need to be treated every 12-24 months to keep them in good condition.

Barrel Board (Denoted as BB)

These are 22mm thick, log-effect boards. They are popular because of their unique look. Barrel Board is similar to Deluxe wood, except that these boards are bulged. Barrel Board is Pressure Treated as standard (more on this below) and it comes with a breathable membrane lining as standard.

TG&V

TG&V (or Tongue and Groove with a V-shaped joint) is only available with the Georgian-style shed. It is a vertically cladded shed design that is similar to Deluxe Pressure Treated wood. It's 22mm thick and it's pressure treated, which means that it comes with an internal lining also.

Pressure Treatment (Denoted as PT)

Pressure Treatment isn't a wood style, but rather an option that you can add to your wood style. It's the addition of preservatives that is pumped into the wood (it's not just a top layer coating). The treating prevents the ill effects of water, fungus or insects such as termites. Pressure Treated wood does not require as much maintenance as non-treated wood.

There is a slight colour difference between treated and non-treated wood. This will occur over time, though the timeframe in which this can occur varies from shed to shed. The colouring on treated sheds becomes slightly 'silvery'.

Pressure Treated sheds come with an internal membrane lining also (the only exception is Pressure Treated Rustic Sheds). This helps maintain a relative internal temperature, which will also combat condensation formation. This lining may be white or grey. Some of our old photos online depicts a blue lining also. Pressure Treated Rustic sheds do not come with an internal membrane lining because they are thin, porous sheds; as such the lining will get damp, become ineffective (and counter-productive) and break down very shortly after it getting wet.

You can paint over Pressure Treated boards if you wish to, however this is not required for at least a decade.

Other Notes

All our wooden sheds are nailed not stapled

OVERHANG SHED

The Overhang wooden shed is a Standard Style Wooden Shed with an 18” / 1.6ft / 46cm overhang on the front apex. It offers shelter from the rain and the sun and it can provide emergency shelter for your cat or dog, should the elements suddenly change. It looks great too!
